Just when you thought you had protected your family from pornography on the computer, there's another threat that's potentially even more significant. The new porn highway that drives right into your family home is available via your mobile devices. Sure you can filter search engine results there as well, but what I believe are much bigger threats are social media apps like Twitter,Instagram, and Pinterest.

While some apps like Instagram say they block "inappropriate" posts, apparently they have a very wide view of what inappropriate is for most people. Plus, in the age of the "selfie" thousands of young women are essentially turning Instagram into a personal pin-up gallery and filling their page with provocative photographs. In essence, they're treating it like a demo reel for voyeurs.

There's remarkably little information online about how to restrict porn on mobile devices – particularly inside apps. But I found this post (http://www.technojoyous.com/2015/08/how-to-block-porn-on-your-phone-android-iphone.html) – copied in below, that has detailed info for both Apple IOS and Android devices. Take the time to find your device, and make the changes.

The great deception is that with apps like Instagram, when you hit the "Search" tab, then scroll down to their suggestions, you can't control what they "suggest." Especially if you have children in the house who occasionally use your devices, or have devices of their own, this is an absolutely critical issue. Granted, it's one more thing that we in a digital generation have to think about that never crossed our parents or grandparents minds.

Cell phone has become a medium to browse offensive contents through the internet. The key reason behind this deed is the privacy measures that smart phones provide to users which are very much deficient in computers and laptops. Similarly, adult contents have become a major interest for mobile phone users since people can browse such contents easily and conveniently with higher privacy. But this can turn out harmful for you as well as your kids or other members. You cannot always keep a track of who uses your mobile phone and who does not. For instance, you placed your phone on the table and went out for some time, and your teen might take the advantage of browsing offensive content for that specific time.

You'd never know what he did or if anyone used your phone because you will casually lift it up and start using again without having any trace. So it is very necessary to secure your phone and prevent others from browsing adult contents in it. Often people have questioned me "How do I block porn contents in my mobile?"
